Mindfulness and compassion Mindfulness is also, in its essence, a profoundly compassionate practice. By allowing the mind to become less centred on the external world of daily life, less consumed with thoughts of the past and the future, we are drawn ever more into a fuller expression of ourselves in this moment. The New York State Department of Financial Services, under pressure from Gov. Andrew Cuomo, is requiring the nation's largest banks to cut ties with nearly 2,000 companies accused of sex or workplace discrimination, LGBTQ discrimination and other sex-based discrimination. It may sound old-fashioned, but a number of major banks are now prohibited from doing business with companies that are anti-LGBTQ, have sex-based discrimination and are linked to the abuse of women. When you're asking corporations to sever their ties with a company that's been found guilty of discrimination, you're in a world that's very different than ever before. This has never been done in the United States. It's a change that's long overdue. When this goes into effect, some people who have been declared "unacceptable" for religious reasons will be forced to close their companies, meaning they could become homeless. The Rev. Peter Bernard Schoeffler said this will close businesses, limit the opportunities for people and kill a living wage for some. The ones with the most means, he said, will use the new regulations to protect their own businesses and push out the ones with less means, such as Christian bakers. You can be fired for many reasons, including not being "cool" enough. Many already are. Now, for the first time in history, a state has acted to prevent those who have been found guilty of discrimination from seeking a new life for themselves and for their employees. This isn't the first time banks have been forced to sever ties with companies found ba244e880a
