Synthesis of [18F]octanoate from alkyl-[18F]fluoride: an effective radiochemical process. The application of the alkyl-[18F]fluoride technique to [18F]octanoate synthesis was examined. Several aromatic and aliphatic alkyl-[18F]fluorides were evaluated as the reagent for reaction with octanoic acid. The highest radiochemical yields (RCYs) were obtained with N-butyl-[18F]fluoride. The electron-withdrawing properties of the [18F]fluoride and the large size of octanoic acid are thought to be responsible for the higher yield. The ability of aliphatic alkyl-[18F]fluoride reagents to produce [18F]octanoate was also demonstrated, with optimal results obtained with N-methyl- or N-tert-butyl-[18F]fluoride. A series of 23 alkyl-[18F]fluorides were evaluated with respect to their relative stability, the rates of the [18F]fluoride elimination process, and the amount of [18F]fluoride needed for a quantitative reaction. It was found that the [18F]fluoride elimination reaction was inversely proportional to the number of carbon atoms on the alkyl group. In addition, the rate was increased with an increase in the relative position of the electron-withdrawing group on the molecule. With respect to the amount of [18F]fluoride required for the reaction, it appeared that [18F]fluoride is the reagent of choice and that the [18F]fluoride can be trapped on the product in high radiochemical yields. 977 So.2d 916 (2008) Charles J.
