Here is the line of code: std::string M = new std::string[count - 1]; The error: error: expected indentation of a line I've checked several times, I'm sure it's a simple error, but I'm not able to find it. A: In general the compiler knows where to put a line break for any textual content in your program (this is called "lexical awareness"). The correct way to overcome this problem is to put brackets {} around your line: std::string M = new std::stringcount - 1; The same rule applies to C/C++ style comments as well, which start with a /* and end with /. They also need to be enclosed in brackets. // good style std::string M = new std::string[count - 1]; // bad style // the compiler puts a line break here // so that the comment can be indented nicely Q: Regex-like delimiter to skip some delimiter and use special character as delimiter I am parsing through a bunch of lines that are sometimes delimited with a \t and sometimes delimited with a \r . I was thinking the best way to handle this would be to use a regex to look for \t, but if it's a \r that I could just skip the \r , etc. It would look like: string str = " \tFirst line \t\r \r ";
