The Attorney-General, George Brandis, has been the subject of a Senate Standing Order enquiry for his role in "very serious wrongdoing" against a former Howard government minister. The inquiry has heard that the alleged wrongdoing by Mr Brandis "involved more than the leaking of restricted information", and has recommended that he "be removed from his position as a senator for the duration of any criminal proceedings that may ensue". The Independent Senator Nick Xenophon, who leads the investigation, has recommended the course of action. Mr Xenophon has tabled a report to the Senate in which he describes Mr Brandis as "a very senior and influential member of the Australian legal community and an experienced and highly skilled barrister". The senator says that Mr Brandis may have been in "a position to utilise his status to facilitate the commission of the offences", and that the crime did not just involve the leaking of information, but the unlawful acquisition and dissemination of such information. "I am satisfied that the circumstances of the allegations made against Mr Brandis... constitute very serious wrongdoing and are of the gravity that they could have adverse consequences for the government," Mr Xenophon says. In an earlier letter to the president of the Senate, Glenn Sterle, Mr Xenophon wrote that he had been directed to conduct a fresh investigation into Mr Brandis on the basis of sworn statements to the effect that he may have leaked the information about the case. The senator says the matter has "drawn attention to possible breaches of secrecy provisions contained in the Crimes Act 1914 and the rules of professional conduct". The terms of the Attorney-General are that he will be absent from the Senate for a period of time without pay unless "the Senate otherwise directs". Mr Xenophon's report does not recommend that the Senate direct the Senate President to appoint a representative to sit with the senator. Neither does it recommend that the Senate issue a censure motion against the senator. The report says that Mr Brandis' ongoing membership of the Senate would "prevent the Senate from exercising the full measure of
