I want to keep the video size small (smaller than 100 MB). What I want is to keep video quality high and upload this video to the user's computer in real time, but I also need to cut the uploading time. I have already found apple's sample code that does this, but it uploads the video in 10 KB chunks. I want to upload the video in real time and only create 10 KB (or smaller) videos. Is there a way to do this in iOS? I know I can use ffmpeg to create a video, and I am working on implementing ffmpeg. I also know that if I use a video file that I created (outside of iOS), this video size should be around 16 MB. A: You can use the MPMoviePlayerViewController and the MPSMTPMPFramework in iOS 6 for this purpose. Both Apple's MPMoviePlayerViewController and the MPSMTPMPFramework are available in iOS 5 as well. They take advantage of the new H.264 hardware accelerated video decoding that is included in iOS 6. You can use the AVAssetWriterInput's videoInput property to create a separate movie writer, so you can write the chunks of video one by one as they come in. If you need a more detailed code example, see the two resources above. Post your Work..
