BEIJING — One of China's most experienced industrial economists was found dead in his apartment on Saturday morning, the latest to fall victim to one of the country's many mysteries. Jing Yong, 51, was also the government's economic adviser at the National Development and Reform Commission, a body responsible for guiding China's economic growth. He had been a member of the Communist Party for more than 30 years. He was last seen on Friday afternoon, according to relatives and colleagues. They said he was found by a cleaner on Saturday, without a pulse, with a kitchen knife to his chest. There was no evidence of foul play, said local police, who have found no trace of a break-in at the apartment, which is less than a 10-minute walk from the main urban area of the Chinese capital. Related: China's unemployment rate hits record low Jing had no history of any major illness, according to his relatives and colleagues, who told the state-run Xinhua News Agency that he would have dinner with them and then go to the National Development and Reform Commission office on Friday. "He was in good health," said his daughter, 30-year-old Jing Weihong, according to the news agency. "He was excited about our trip to Beijing next week." Since then, his colleagues have found no trace of him or his phone. Jing was not the first economist to have died in the past two years. In March 2017, seven economists at the Ministry of Finance were found dead in two years, with suicide being the leading cause of death. Tian Jianping, an economist at the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences who worked closely with Jing Yong on economic policy, told the Global Times that he had not received any calls from colleagues and friends since Friday. "I feel very anxious, worried and powerless," Tian told the state-run China Daily, adding that the government is often slow to respond to such incidents. to modernize. The Economic Commission of the Communist Party of China's Central Committee first established the Economics Department in 1952, according to its website, but the commission started drawing up the Modern Economic System in 1984. 2d92ce491b
