Adhesions are abnormal fibrous bands of tissue that form between adjacent organs or tissues and/or within the peritoneal cavity after trauma, inflammation, or surgical procedures. Although prevention is the goal for any of the surgical procedures, the treatment of adhesions is complicated because the mechanisms responsible for adhesion formation remain unknown. This study was designed to investigate the relationship between inflammation and adhesion formation in a standardized and reproducible model of peritoneal adhesion formation and to compare pro- and anti-inflammatory pathways. Ovine embryos were treated with neutralizing antibody to the potent pro-inflammatory cytokine interleukin (IL)-1beta and the anti-inflammatory cytokine IL-10. The initial treatment with antibody was effective, and subsequent peritoneal injections of antibody-treated media, either IL-1beta or IL-10, did not produce adhesions. However, IL-10 treatment did promote adhesion formation in a dose-dependent fashion when administered with IL-1beta. These data suggest that IL-1beta and IL-10 may function as pro- and anti-inflammatory mediators, respectively
