Opioids elicit growth hormone (GH) secretion in man and in other species. The opioid receptor class (μ , δ , κ) mediating the GH-releasing effect of opioids is unknown. To investigate opioid-mediated GH secretion in vivo and in vitro in conscious dogs. Continuous intravenous infusion of 0.5 microgram/kg/min of morphine sulfate in dogs resulted in abrupt increases in plasma GH concentration, which peaked at 2-3 h. This effect was dose dependent, and was antagonized by the opiate antagonist naltrexone (1 mg/kg, i.v.). The GH response to morphine was blocked by naloxone. To examine directly the involvement of opioid receptors in opioid-mediated GH release, microdialysis with a tip (0.5 mm) was used to investigate in vivo release of GH in the dog pituitary after morphine was administered. The release of endogenous GH was significantly increased during infusion of morphine (1.0 mg/kg, i.v.). In addition, the opioid receptor antagonist naloxone (1 mg/kg, i.v.) significantly reduced the increase in GH release caused by morphine. The opioid effect was concentration dependent. From the in vivo data, we conclude that opioid receptors in the hypothalamus or pituitary mediate GH release in the dog. In vitro studies revealed that in pituitary cells, morphine caused a rapid release ba244e880a
