I guess I could just make a table. I'll do that. But I hope there is a simple calculation I've overlooked. A: The answer depends on which average you use: The general US unit of measure is the "US gallon", which is sometimes also called the "Imperial gallon". The "Imperial gallon" is the volume of the same mass of water as 1 US gallon, that is, $\frac{0.000264 \text{ (kg)}}{0.892858 \text{ (lb)}} / (0.16838 \text{ (in)})^3$; it's also equal to $\frac{0.0002604044 \text{ (m}^3\text{)}}{\text{(m)}}$. The "US gallon" is the actual volume of the US gallon, which is $\frac{0.946377 \text{ (m}^3\text{)}}{(1.012 \text{ (m)})}$; it is also equal to $\frac{0.0002604034 \text{ (m}^3\text{)}}{\text{(m)}}$. I think the answer should be 0.946377 , since the Imperial gallon is actually 0.00026 kg per Imperial gallon. If you need kilograms in the solution, which is more common, than you can use $\frac{\text{number of Imperial gallons}}{\text{number of US gallons}} \cdot \frac{\text{Imperial gallon}}{\text{US gallon}} = \frac{0.00026 \text{ (kg)}}{0.946377 \text{ (m}^3\text{)}} = 0.0012783076 \text{ (kg)} = 12.783076 \text{ (g)}$

Proinflammatory effect of IL-1 β on Langerhans cells in psoriatic lesions: an immunohistochemical and ultrastructural study. The aims of this work were 1) to determine the involvement of Langerhans cells in the inflammatory process of human psoriatic skin; 2) to clarify whether interleukin-1 β (IL-1 β) can induce an inflammatory pattern in Langerhans cells (LCs) within psoriatic epidermis; and 3) to determine the impact of IL-1 β on the morphology and ultrastructure of LCs in psoriasis. Human biopsies were taken from healthy skin (n = 8), non-lesional (n = 20) and lesional (n = 22) epidermis from psoriasis patients. Psoriatic skin biopsies showed an inflammatory infiltrate rich in macrophages and neutrophils in both the dermis and the epidermis. However, these cells were much more numerous in the epidermis of psoriatic lesions. Immunohistochemical studies demonstrated the presence of epidermal LCs in the epidermal-dermal junction in all biopsies examined. In vitro, high concentrations of IL-1 β stimulated an increase in the number of dendritic cell (DC) precursors and mature DCs within the epidermal layer of psoriatic lesions. A high proportion of LCs (62.8%) revealed ultrastructural changes, such as an increased number of cytoplasm
