The present invention relates to an optical communication apparatus capable of performing phase-shift keying (PSK) modulation and differential quadrature phase-shift keying (DQPSK) modulation. In the prior art, there is the transmission-power control technique for a transmission signal waveform for a data rate of 10 Gbit/s or more, such as the technique disclosed in JP-A-Hei 5-127089. With this technique, if a received waveform by which a phase angle of a carrier wave is varied in accordance with a transmission rate of a data rate of 10 Gbit/s or more is directly input into a clock reproducing circuit for clock regeneration, a clock reproducing circuit has a problem in that a phase range of a reproduced clock signal greatly varies, so that accurate clock regeneration is impossible. Thus, a waveform demodulator is used to demodulate the received waveform into a first amplitude waveform and a second amplitude waveform having an average amplitude of the received waveform, to measure the average amplitude of the second amplitude waveform to calculate a phase angle of a carrier wave, and to demodulate the received waveform into a phase variation data rate less than or equal to 10 Gbit/s. This technique is disclosed in JP-A-Hei 5-127089. If the phase variation data rate is 9 Gbit/s, a single-side band filtering is performed by a transmission data rate less than 10 Gbit/s, so that a carrier wave is demodulated, and an average amplitude of a received waveform is measured to determine a phase angle of a carrier wave. Thus, it is possible to demodulate the received waveform into the first amplitude waveform and the second amplitude waveform
