We decided to create a new page for artists on various music genres to showcase their talent, works of art and to also show that we have fans all over the world who enjoy this kind of art. Feel free to browse and join the site! If you have any suggestions for the future of this page, feel free to send us an email or send a private message. I'm working on an iOS app and I want it to be optimised for both the iPhone and iPad. What's the best way of doing this? I've read Apple's App Programming Guide, but I'm not entirely sure if that is the best way to approach the problem. A: First, if you're working on an app for iOS 5 or later (I'm assuming you are using iOS 6.0, if not, that might not be a factor), you don't need to bother with an iPad specific design. Just design your app to be identical on the iPhone and the iPad, and it will automatically look good on both the iPhone and the iPad. You only need to make different views if you are developing for iOS 4, and they work in iOS 5 and beyond. Now, for devices (as opposed to simply views): your app needs to have some sort of UIDevice object, and that device object will tell you the device's screen size (both portrait and landscape, which is why you don't need to bother with landscape vs. portrait separate views), and then you have to test your program's views to see if they look right on the iPad. If you don't, your program will look funny if the user is on the iPad. If you
